CHAllenging Health Inequities

Jack Kelly’s life went from hockey to heroin to hero – all in six short years!

Jack grew up in Charlestown and sustained an injury playing high school hockey. After surgery, he became addicted to pain medication which led to heroin, homelessness and a criminal record. At the age of 22, after treatment and support services, Jack became a prominent voice in the recovery movement. He was the featured speaker at Massachusetts Organization for Addiction Recovery’s (MOAR) monthly meeting with his book – Sharp Needle: In tow. It’s a vivid story of pain, resolve and hope. Today, Jack works as an advocate in recovery to respond to the opioid crisis.

accessible. CHA advocates for change, bringing care to the people – and yes, we are very proud of our deep community ties and commitment to social justice are challenging social inequities. Healthcare is a basic human right and CHA is working to make it inclusive and equitable. Our deep community ties and commitment to social justice are challenging social inequities.

By addressing the social influences of health, CHA is bringing care to the people when and where they need it. We are responding to the rise in HIV and Hepatitis C cases at our Trebor Clinic and working to expand reproductive health services to Somerville and Everett schools and supporting outreach to immigrants with trauma and mental health needs.

Jack Kelly’s life went from hockey to heroin to hero – all in six short years! Jack grew up in Charlestown and sustained an injury playing high school hockey. After surgery, he became addicted to pain medication which led to heroin, and eventually, death. He lived his life with no judgment or stigma just like any other disease. Ellie worked to integrate mental health and substance use treatment in all primary care locations. Another way that CHA is improving access is through the Everett Peak Recovery Program, in one year, CHA treated 783 patients of whom 63% followed through with treatment. This successful program has been expanded to Somerville and is just one of the many CHA programs that the Foundation helps to support to directly challenge social inequities.

By addressing the social influences of health, CHA brings care to the people when and where they need it. We are responding to the rise in HIV and Hepatitis C cases at our Zinberg Clinic and working to expand reproductive health services in the community. We are growing our oral health program to Somerville and is just one of the many CHA programs that the Foundation helps to support to directly challenge social inequities.
